Regarding the "Support other Open Source communities", I assume openSUSE should meanwhile have enough (virtual) resources to help smaller projects.

What comes into my mind:

- supporting freenode.net with an own VM? => http://freenode.net/support
- donate resources to the ntp pool project => http://www.pool.ntp.org/join.html (not really via virtual machines)
- ...

What we already do:

- shrek.kde.org (git/svn via SSH) for the KDE community
- our own GPG keyserver enhancing SKS OpenPGP Keyserver Pool

IMHO we should consider our needs (which open source project are we using as openSUSE users/openSUSE heroes) and maybe do some marketing (via elections?) around it. Most free openSUSE projects (like OBS, 110r, ICC, openATTIC or OSEM) are already supported, but for those were we do NOT have any developer at (open)SUSE, we might consider to help, if we are using their software and they need resources.

What do you think?
